#1 Not Saying Please & Thank You

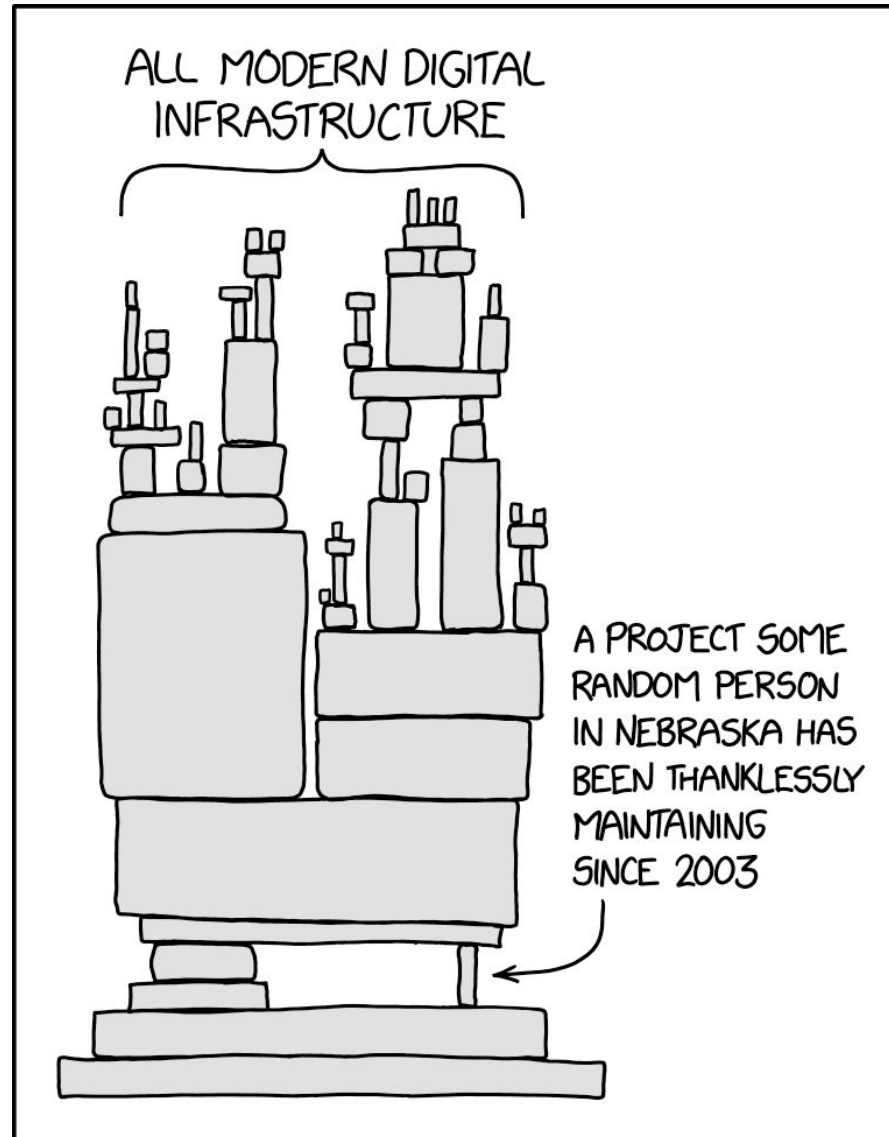

Pro-tip: Many OSS developers are not working full time on a single project. Plenty are only contributing their spare time, possibly to many projects!

Thanks to @dims for “great” Twitter content to copy

#2 Not Being Considerate and Empathetic

One of my biggest professional frustrations is people who come to a large open source project and say "you should be doing X" Cool then you step up and do it commented 3 hours ago

Wow. This one seems simple to implement. Why has it been 5 years 🙄

#2 Not Being Considerate and Empathetic

Here's what's being there:

1. This issue was open for 3 days. The fact you've mentioned that you were assigned this issue is by yourself. Similarly, I assigned this issue to myself today and made some changes to the code right today, and raised the PR. After raising PR, you were removed from assigned with the lines "I can't work on this issue since we are already working". What's the meaning of Open Source then?
2. The issue was not a big deal such that you were taking 3 days for it to be fixed. What's wrong If I resolved this issue and fixed it right today?
3. Also, [redacted], Do you remember my last PR which didn't merge related to Certificates because of some conflicts. Someone who assigned this issue to himself after me raised the PR and out of both PR, His PR was merged because mine one has conflicts.

The screenshot displays a GitHub issue thread with the following sequence of events:

- Contributor commented on 23 May: "No you can't work on this issue if someone is already working . this is against the policy of kubernetes. tonight I will open PR for this issue. There are many issues just work on that. /unassign [redacted]"
- k8s-ci-robot unassigned [redacted] on 23 May
- Contributor commented on 23 May: "See this issue has been opened from three days and as far I've observed the another contributor also raised the assign option for the same. Let my changes be reviewed and if it doesn't hold good, definitely you can also raise PR. The best one will be merged. /assign"
- Contributor commented on 23 May: "/assign"
- k8s-ci-robot assigned [redacted] on 23 May
- Contributor commented on 23 May: "/unassign [redacted]"

Hi @kushalShukla-web!

If you want to be a Cloud Native contributor, I suggest starting by checking out the CNCF Contributors page.

If you're interested in being a mentee, you can also take a look around this repo and see what opportunities there are. Some projects listed here have issues marked "Good first issue" which you can take a look at. It's good to communicate and work with projects that you're interested in doing a mentorship with.

Click here to add to My Schedule.

<https://sched.co/ytwp>

The session will highlight my learning as a student during the journey as a new contributor starting to contribute after attending a New Contributor Workshop during KCD Bengaluru to becoming an approver recently. I will share the nuances of working together in the community and will focus on areas that need a lot of contributors now especially with the "chop wood and carry water" kind of work that could be easily done by students. I will further focus on how various sigs runs mentoring cohort for contributors to grow up the contributing ladder and learn stuff necessary for taking leadership or helping the leadership, I have been part of such mentoring cohort under sig-contribex and now I'm a moderator of the k-dev mailing list. Also, I will try to focus on how new contributors loose interest while looking for good-first-issues, and I will try to emphasize the importance of regular sig meetings and discussions and help they have helped me to come up with solutions to help the project.
